

Activity for Sudan

Storytelling

In the records of African history, griot was the honorable name given to wise and knowledgeable storytellers entrusted with the important task of documenting tribal history and geneologies. Storytelling is still used today in many parts of Africa as a way of passing along history about the country and about one's family.

Have children sit in a circle. Begin with a volunteer and ask him to tell the other players something about his family or something he knows about the history of his country. Go around the circle giving everyone a chance. These is a great opportunity for the children to learn more about their classmates and more about history!